Per our discussion...

It seems like the language you suggested would be something like: "At such time as Les Watt no longer desires to, or is able to, serve as president of the 501c3 non-profit corporation, then a 'presidential selection committee' composed of the remaining 501c3 board members plus one member of WVC and one member of the WTC BID, shall convene to select a replacement. The selection committee shall select either a current or future WVC member to serve as president of the 501c3."

Does this work?

After thinking about it, I don't like the idea of "us v them" that we talked about earlier. Somehow the conversation has to start turning to together vs "out voted." A even member committee forces everyone to come together on a compromise candidate.

Let me know your thoughts.
